§ I R.

I hath been roundly affirmed by the great Craftsman, Mr. D'Anvers, that the Honourable Gentleman was so far from having any Hand in restoring the Tranquility of Europe, that he really knew nothing of the Peace until the Preliminary Articles were concluded; a Conjecture in which he is followed by all the Minor Craftsmen and Coffee-house Politicians, the Statesmen of Grub-street, and the Patriots of the Old Bailey.

I happened, a few Days ago, to step into a Coffee-house, where one of these Sages was haranguing his Audience with more than ordinary Importance. It is plain, said he, that our Ministry know nothing of foreign Affairs. If it had not been for the Great Mogul, we had been in a fine Pickle before now. I was writing a Letter of some Consequence, but was obliged, by this noisy Fellow, to make a precipitate Retreat. Pray, Madam, said I to the Gentlewoman at the Bar, Who is that Gentleman? Lord, Sir, he is a Barber in Middle-Row. A fine Genius indeed!

I passed that Evening with a Club of very ingenious Gentlemen, where the Conversation turned chiefly upon Publick Affairs. One of the Company, who was an Attorney, seemed to be a little antiministerially disposed, and made use of Mr. D'Anvers's Argument before-mentioned. Says the President of the Club to him, Before we enter upon Politics, I must desire you to write to an Acquaintance of ours; he really uses me very ill. However, don't take out a Writ against him. No, replied the other, there will be no Occasion for a Writ; he'll be influenced by my Letter, and come and make you Satisfaction, without letting me know any thing of the Matter; for he'll be ashamed to see me. Well said the President, if he should comply, it will be owing to the Weight of your Letter. Ay, replied the Attorney, he does not love the Law well enough to stand a Trial with you. Put the Glass about, cried the President; for I am not qualified to light my Pipe.

You do allow then, continued he, that my Debtor may be influenced by your Letter, and come to Terms with me, without your knowing any thing of his Compliance, until a Compromise is actually made; why then, by a Parity of Reason, may not the same Event happen in the Publick? Is there any Incongruity in supposing that the Allies were influenced by the pathetic, and pressing Memorials of our Ambassador at the Hague? (Tho' to shorten the Debate) I should make you a Concession you are unable to prove, namely, that the British Ministry were not previously acquainted with, nor consulted in the framing the Preliminary Articles.

No Replication being offered on the Part of the Attorney to this home Thrust, the President had the Goodness to let him fall gently, and addressing himself to the Board, The Presumptions, said he, are very strong that our Ministry were acquainted with all the Steps taken in this important Negotiation; and, if I may be at Liberty to make a Conjecture in my Turn, I verily believe, that the signing the Preliminary Articles, not essentially varying from the Plan proposed by his Majesty and the States, without the Acceptance of our Mediation in Form, was a Fineness of the Allies, to save their Honour, being desirous of having their Compliance appear voluntary, rather than proclaim to all Christendom, by the Sound of a Trumpet, that they were compelled thereto by the Influence of the Arms and Councils of Britain. Thus far the President.

Our modern Patriots are offended at the Peace, because it redounds so much to the Honour of the present Administration. Things have indeed taken a strange Turn: No Thanks however to the Ministry, that the Liberties of Germany were not swallowed up. Alas! poor Marshal Berwick, — sacrificed before Philipsburg, — when he might have taken the Elector of Bavaria by the Hand, and led him up to the Throne of Vienna before Prince Eugene was joined by the auxiliary Troops. What a pretty History is this of the After-games? Is it not 350 Miles from Philipsburg to Vienna? Were not all the Passes of the Black Forest guarded by Imperial Troops? Was not the Junction impracticable? and, if feasible, must it not have been attended with the Ruin of the whole French Army? Prince Eugene being at their Heels with an Hundred thousand Men in his own Country, while Count Konigsegg would have laid the Electorate of Bavaria waste, and thereby deprived the Marshal's Army all possible Subsistence.

But the Observer, and after him the Craftsman, has clenched the Ministry at once. * Will it be pretended, that our Ministers sowed the Seeds of Diffention between Spain and the King of Sardinia, in relation to the Milanese, which made the latter grow cool in the Prosecution of the War, and at last withdraw himself, as well as his Troops? Or, that they advised the Queen of Spain to make those secret Overtures to the Court of Vienna, in favour of her Son, which gave France so just an Alarm, and occasioned the present Accommodation between that Court and the Emperor?

1. I answer in the negative, that they did not.
2. I admit the Quarrel about the Milanese.
3. I will suppose that such Overtures were made to the Court of Vienna. But

4. FROM the Reluctance the Queen of Spain hath shewn to part with her native Country, the ancient Inheritance of her Ancestors, into the Hands of a Stranger, it may, I think, be reasonably concluded, that she would have been glad to have given the Court of France ample Satisfaction for the Injury alledged to have been offered by such clandestine Negotiation, and also unquestionable Security for her future Sincerity.

AND this might easily have been effected by putting the strong Places of Tuscany, and the City of Mantua, when taken, into the Possession of France as her Trustee, until the Conclusion of the War.

NOR would France have refused to substantial a Security, and so plenary a Reparation, if she had not been awed by the Maritime Powers; and therefore dexterously laid hold of these Overtures, or pretended Overtures, as a Handle for terminating the War, which would otherwise have been carried the next Campaign to her own Doors.

AND who can doubt the Readiness of the Court of Spain to have made the King of Sardinia easy, by a formal Cession of the Milanese, rather than let his Troops be withdrawn, and the Grand Alliance be dissolved, and the Milanese be at last divided between him and the Emperor, and all the rest of Lombardy ravished from the Sceptre of the King of the Two Sicilies, and erected into a potent Kingdom in the Imperial Family, who might prove so dangerous a Neighbour?

THE Solution is obvious, that the King of Great Britain had convinced the Allies, by the vigorous and repeated Remonstrances of our Ministers at the Hague, that the British Nation would never suffer the Equilibre of Power to be destroyed, and Europe a Slave to the House of Bourbon. And nothing can be more evident, upon the whole, than that, to those Remonstrances, and the wise Measures of the Court of Great Britain, the present Repose of Europe is owing.

I am, Sir, your humble Servant,

Lincoln's Inn.

WM. PRYNN.

Madrid, March 1. O. S.

Yesterday M. Caraccioli, who lately arrived from Rome with the Cap for the Infant Cardinal, performed the Ceremony at the Pardo usual upon such Occasions, in the Presence of their Catholic Majesties, the rest of the Royal Family, and a great Concourse of the chief Nobility of this Court. Their Catholic Majesties are expected back from the Pardo on the 17th Instant, and, according to Custom, will pass the rest of Lent in the Retiro; from whence they propose to set out for Aranjuez on the 4th of next Month; where Preparations are already making for a Camp of near 5000 Horse and Dragoons, which his Catholic Majesty is to review about the End of May. The Duke of Bourbonville has been appointed Commander in Chief of this Body of Troops, in Quality of Captain General, and the two Lieutenant Generals under him are to be the Marquis de Bedmar, and the Marquis de Montreal. This being her Britannick Majesty's Birthday, Mr. Keene, the British Plenipotentiary, gave upon this Occasion a splendid Entertainment to his Excellency Seignior Patinho, all the foreign Ministers, the great Officers of State, several Grandees, and other Persons of Distinction.

Hague, March 16. O. S. We are very well assured from London, that Sir Thomas Fitzgerald, who has the Care of the Affairs of Spain there in the Absence of the Count de Montijo, declared to his Britannick Majesty, that the Catholic King, out of pure Regard to his Majesty's Invitation, had determin'd to use his utmost for promoting a General Peace, and that he had therefore acceded to the Preliminaries agreed on at Vienna. We are moreover assured, that the Chevalier Ossorio, the Sardinian Envoy at London, expressed himself in much the same Terms, when he declared the Accession of the King his Master; and if the Marquis de St. Gilles uses the same Style, as no doubt he will, when he gives Notice to the States of the Accession of the King his Master, it will be a strong Confirmation, that the amicable Councils of the Maritime Powers have had the greatest Influence on the Resolutions of their Catholic and Sardinian Majesties. Nothing however is more certain, than that the Ministers of England and Holland are more esteemed than ever in Spain, and that they are often called to assist at the Deliberations of that Court.

They write from Gotha, that great Preparations are making there for the Reception of the Ambassador Extraordinary expected from London; that the Garison which is augmented to 4000 Men, are to be new cloath'd, and that the Burghers are to appear in Arms to honour the Ambassador's publick Entry. The Lord de la War arrived here from London last Saturday Night, having landed in the Morning at Helvo sluis, and set out Yesterday for Utrecht in his Way to Gotha.

*I have read most of her Poems, and believe your Lordship will observe, that they generally contain something New and Useful, tending to the Reproof of some Vice or Folly, or Recommending some Virtue: She never writes on a Subject with general, unconnected Topics, but always with a Scheme and Method, driving to some particular End; wherein many Writers in Verse, and of some Distinction, are so often known to fail.
